

Table of Contents

Introduction	7
1. Gendering Narratives and Narrating Gender	13
1.1 Gender, discourse and organizations	14
1.2 Gender as practice and institution	16
1.3 Gender as organizational narrative	20
1.4 Gender and narrative: a methodological framework	25
1.5 Gendertelling in traditionally male contexts	26
2. The Discursive Production of Selves	30
2.1 Narrative selves and gender positionings	32
2.2 The plots of the female stories: choices and coincidences	36
2.3 The plots of the male stories: the path marked out, and marking out one's own path	39
2.4 The narrative construction of difference	41
2.5 Narrating gender between the exceptional and the ordinary	45
3. Women Tell Their Stories: Challenges and Windmills	48
3.1 The twofold challenge: different from men but also from other women	49
3.2 Stories of challenge and challengers	54
3.3 Women and windmills	68
4. Men Tell Their Stories: Gender Is Not a Problem!	71
4.1 How was She welcomed?	73
4.2 Men's positionings: the detached observer, the risk-taker, the cadet.....	77
4.3 His reaction to Her challenges	81
4.4 How the work of men becomes male work	84
4.5 Women? They're all envious!	89
4.6 Conclusions: the reticent masculinity	91
5. Living In Parallel Worlds	93
5.1 The resistance raised by a masculinist gender culture: a construction site is no place for a woman	94
5.2 A traditional gender culture: agriculture	97
5.3 A tendentially paritarian gender culture: the world of information technology.....	100
5.4 The visible glass ceiling: the retailing world	107

5.5	The small family firm grows and discovers women	110
5.6	Industry innovates and takes on graduates: the dual-regime gender culture	112
5.7	Multinational companies and local cultures	117
5.8	Licence to compete: journalism	122
5.9	When jobs are feminized, they are taken by women: the insurance world.....	126
5.10	Bureaucracy as the guarantor of parallel paths: the world of banking.....	128
5.11	A paritarian gender culture: desk work	133
5.12	Being a couple in an organization	136
5.13	Conclusions: cultural regimes and gender citizenship	139
6.	In a World of (Gendered) Rules	142
6.1	Necessary conditions	144
6.2	Prescriptions	152
6.3	Tactics	157
6.4	The double bind: how to manage the ambivalence of models	163
	Conclusions	169
	Appendix	175
	References	177