

Contents

Acknowledgements	11
Introduction	13
Why focus on text creation?	13
Text creation in the 21st century	15
Important priorities	16
What do the ten chapters focus on?	19
References	21
1 How should writing be taught? Past and present perspectives	23
Introduction	23
The role and view of writing in various methods and approaches	24
Aims of learning to write	29
Views of learning to write	32
Conclusion	39
References	40
2 Implications of a functional view of writing	43
Introduction	43
Writing aims to accomplish or do something	43
Writing has a communicative purpose	45
Writing does not take place in a vacuum: The role of contexts	51
Writing relates to the development of genre awareness ...	53
Conclusion	55
References	56

3	Scaffolding narrative and creative writing	58
	Introduction	58
	The place of narratives	59
	Scaffolding students' writing by means of genre-specific structure	60
	Scaffolding students' writing by means of writing frames and model texts	64
	Scaffolding students' writing by means of relief theory ...	67
	Conclusion	71
	References	71
4	Teaching argumentative writing	73
	Introduction	73
	An argumentative learner text	73
	Strategies writers use to form arguments	74
	Strategies writers use to raise the quality of their arguments	77
	Strategies writers use to enhance the effectiveness of their communication	79
	Strategies writers use to project their identity and attitude	83
	Conclusion	85
	References	85
5	Persuasive strategies in text creation	88
	Introduction	88
	Persuasive discourse in the teaching of English	89
	The writer's communicative purpose illustrated by two textbook tasks	90
	Discourse mixing and imagined readers	91
	Citation as a persuasive strategy in academic writing	95
	Examples of persuasive strategies within the field of business	97
	The use of persuasive visual strategies	98
	Conclusion	101
	References	102

6	Teaching part skills	104
	Introduction	104
	Part skills or holistic competence?	105
	Focus on form or focus on meaning?	111
	Task engagement	114
	Conclusion	115
	References	116
7	Text creation tasks within a communicative paradigm	118
	Introduction	118
	Six criteria for text creation tasks	119
	Conclusion	136
	References	136
8	Aspects of multimodality and Web 2.0 communication	139
	Introduction	139
	Text creation as communication: Language and multimodal ensembles	140
	What kind of competence does multimodal text creation require?	148
	A multimodal artefact as a catalyst for multimodal learning	150
	A paradigm shift of Web 2.0 communication exemplified by blogs and wikis	153
	Conclusion	155
	References	156
9	Feedback from peers and teachers	160
	Introduction	160
	Some general principles of feedback to written texts	161
	Some principles of feedback from peers	162
	Some principles of teachers' written feedback	165
	What should teachers give feedback on?	168
	Digital feedback	171
	Conclusion	174
	References	175

10	The writing teacher as researcher	178
	Introduction	178
	Teachers' beliefs	179
	Identifying the what to research	180
	Action research – a focus on improving the learning situation	183
	Using learner texts as the main source of data	185
	Investigating students' attitudes and motivation for writing	188
	Investigating English teachers' approaches to the teaching of writing	189
	Validity and reliability	190
	Ethical considerations	191
	Writing up the research	192
	Conclusion	196
	References	197
	 Index	 201